Modern Salicylate Therapy

ALTHOUGH acetylsalicylic acid is one of the most popular and effective non-narcotic analgesics available, its use has frequently been discarded by the physician in view of the possibility of its irritating the gastro-intestinal tract.

'Alasil,' however, helps to overcome this objection by providing the beneficial therapeutic effects of acetylsalicylic acid in such a form that it is acceptable even by delicate or disordered digestions. This tolerability is due to the fact that 'Alasil' combines acetylsalicylic acid with Dibasic Calcium Phosphate and 'Alocol,' a potent gastric sedative and antacid.

For these reasons 'Alasil' is an analgesic, antipyretic and anti-rheumatic, which can be administered with complete confidence in all the conditions in which such an agent is indicated. It is so well tolerated that its use can be pushed to the desired extent.

VITAMIN THERAPY

Dental decay in Pregnancy

Not so many years ago the coincidence of dental caries during pregnancy was regarded as inevitable; to-day it is widely accepted as an indication of an insufficiency of vitamins and minerals.

In the last month of pregnancy the requirement of calcium, for example, is approximately 16 times the amount present in the maternal blood at any one time. Deficiencies are by no means confined to calcium, however, and Pregnavite was expressly designed as a multiple vitamin and mineral supplement to meet the special demands of pregnancy.

Pregnavite

in recommended doses supplies :—

Vitamin A	4,000 i.u.	Calcium	153 mg.
Vitamin B_1	200 i.u.	Phosphorus	250 mg.
Vitamin C	400 i.u.	Iron	68 mg.
Vitamin D	300 i.u.	Trace Minerals	3 p.p.m.

STANDARDIZATION

The advantages of standardization are well recognised, especially in alkaline medication. 'BiSoDoL' Powder, a gastric sedative and triple antacid, is particularly effective in the treatment of digestive disorders and morning sickness. The constituents of 'BiSoDoL' are standardized and, as such, can be regarded as reliable. The preparation is agreeably flavoured with peppermint and is readily miscible with milk or water. Moreover 'BiSoDoL' gives prompt relief.

Urgently Needed

THREE weeks ago, in discussing the stepping up of demobilization, we expressed a hope that, in the speeding up which must follow the early ending of the war in the Far East, both housing and hospitals would have special consideration because of their importance to the health and happiness to the nation. Actually before our words appeared in print, the Government had announced in the House, in reply to a question by Mr. Churchill, how the Class B releases were to be allocated. (The Class A releases are those originally planned on length of service and age: the Class B releases are the additional releases determined by the nation's need for workers in specific fields.) The needs of housing have already had the special consideration that they demand. We hope the needs of hospitals will remain a number one priority, and will receive equal consideration.

The Minister of Labour stated in the House that they were proceeding as quickly as possible with the release of men in Class B for urgent reconstruction work and that the majority of releases here would be for the housing programme, but there would be substantial releases for other industries and services, including coal mining and teaching. When asked for details Mr. Isaacs said that the allocation of 100,000 releases which had already taken place was as follows:—Building and civil engineering operatives, 60,000; building material workers, 10,000; underground coal miners, 30,000; school teachers, 10,000. The priority given to the providing of homes and their heating will meet with general approval. New concessions announced this week for men who accept early release will, we hope, help to improve results.

With regard to the release of women in Class B, Mr. Isaacs stated that they had decided to introduce a scheme under which women will be released if they are willing to return to their employment in such important civilian industries as textiles, clothing, boots and shoes, and laundries, where experienced workers are urgently needed. We hope that 'civilian industries' will not be the only basis for this allocation, but that, as in the case of men, both civilian industries and civilian services will have consideration, for under the heading 'services' would come both domestic and nursing staff for hospitals. A Government announcement as we go to press shows that the needs of hospitals for nurses and domestic workers have received consideration. At present, we understand that women in the Services may apply for release under Class B if they have had six months' nursing experience (during the last seven years for the A.T.S.) and are not engaged in nursing duties.

Of course, we must remember that nursing has remained a priority during the war years and that it had some of the glamour of being a 'war service' though it could not boast the attraction of a recognized outdoor uniform to vie on equal terms with the A.T.S., the W.R.N.S., the W.A.A.F. or the Nursing Cadet Service of America. Nevertheless, the recruitment of a sufficient and efficient nursing and domestic service for the hospitals is an essential part of the planning necessary for the establishment of an efficient National Health Service to which the new Government is pledged. The community, in general, especially the younger members of it, and the Government, in particular, must remember that it is useless to vote or to plan for a National Health Service unless there are the workers willing to man it.

In nursing, as in other industries and services, there would be the danger, which existed during war-time restrictions, that if early releases were pressed to permit persons to return to the profession, some persons might make use of the opportunity to obtain release when they did not really want to nurse and therefore would not do it satisfactorily, and might not remain. The same might happen in the domestic field and, though here unwilling service is not necessarily quite so detrimental because it is not so intimately connected with the patient, again it is undesirable. A happy atmosphere and willing service is so important to the patients' recovery that everything must be done to preserve it, and for that matter to increase it.

And here the nursing profession should consider the truth of what Sir Stafford Cripps, President of the Board of Trade, has said with regard to the cotton industry. Where the workers are unwilling to return to their former occupation of spinning after war-time work in munition factories, he has recommended that, rather than trust to forcible direction, the industry must rely on making conditions more attractive. Are conditions for both nursing and domestic staff reasonably attractive? Is the remuneration on a satisfactory competitive scale? If not, the shortage may well continue.

PLEASURE WITH A PURPOSE

ALL members and friends of the Royal College of Nursing will learn with pleasure that Messrs. Derry & Toms of Kensington have very kindly offered the Royal College of Nursing the proceeds of their pleasant roof garden for next week, September 10 to 15. These gardens—an oasis in London's war-time grimness—have for several years raised large sums of money for various hospitals, nursing services, war charities and similar deserving causes: we feel sure the public will appreciate the opportunity to show something of their appreciation of the devoted and courageous work of the nursing profession during the war both in the Services and in civilian fields. The gardens will be the scene of opening ceremonies each day at 3.15 p.m., and personalities from the hospital and nursing worlds, with the kind support of stage celebrities and others, will take part (see opposite page for detailed programme).

The Royal College of Nursing will devote the proceeds to the expansion of the Educational Department which has grown so rapidly during the war, and which must now be prepared to meet both the needs of newly qualified nurses, and of those nurses demobilized from the Services who want refresher courses to fit them to resume their pre-war civilian duties, or post-graduate courses to prepare them to become sister tutors, nurse administrators, dietitians or health visitors. Many have put off qualifying for these important fields of work to serve their country: qualified persons are in short supply as a result, and the Royal College of Nursing must meet the needs of the nursing profession and of the country.

The needs of the country are great. There must be reconstruction in the hospitals and nurse training schools and in the public health services for the establishment of a satisfactory National Health Service. Well qualified leaders are essential and everything that is done to help suitable nurses to prepare themselves for the reconstruction programme will benefit not only the profession, but also the health of the public which it serves.

We hope nurses and their many friends will visit the roof garden and show their appreciation of the interest of Messrs. Derry & Toms, and of the war-time work of the Royal College of Nursing.

Topical Notes

Aid for Prisoners of War

AUSTRALIAN Red Cross workers, many of whom helped in the repatriation of Australians released from camps in Germany and Italy and all specially trained for the job, have gone to Rangoon, Manila and other repatriation centres to care for the newly released prisoners of war. Other units are preparing reception areas in New Guinea and Borneo and one is charged with the care of released prisoners in Singapore. The Australian Red Cross has already supplied relief stores of clothing and foodstuffs, sufficient for 11,000 prisoners and internees in Hong Kong, Shanghai and Formosa, to the value of £200,000.

Return from the East

NEARLY 500 men from Britain and the Empire released from Tokio prison camps set sail in the escort carrier 'Speaker' on the way home from Tokio on September 3. Classified as 'fit to travel in a normal way' these men have nevertheless suffered great hardships: the three and a half years of habitual lack of food probably have caused their stomachs to contract and their digestive organs to deteriorate and, although fascinated by the rows of loaves in the ship's bakery, they have been unable to take or digest much. To sleep in the comfort of a bunk, to have a tube of toothpaste once again, to know that he is on the way back to a life, details of which he had almost forgotten, these are surely tonics and treats to the returning prisoner, that we in this country can barely understand. The men who have suffered more will return in hospital ships where they can receive specialized care and British and American doctors are discussing the treatment of prisoners from mining areas who have been worked without mercy. Here, social medicine and rehabilitation—words which some consider to have been used mainly as political weapons—will be put to a greater test than ever before.

"The True Glory"

THE Ministry of Information films have during this war taken the place of the poetic epic once occupied in the traditional recording of themes. This, the latest and last of the series as far as the war in Europe is concerned, is an account of the great invason from D-day to the capitulation of Germany. It is in keeping with the character of our present day civilization that the film has no hero. Though General Eisenhower in his foreword emphasises that the enterprise was dependent on the courage and skill of each individual who took part in it, it is not to sing the deeds of any individual or group that the blank verse commentary was bought in. The real "hero" is rather a quality, the ability to converge the work of brains and hands from all over the world to fit with absolute accuracy into an intricate plan which will put into effect a common purpose and to maintain the strain until the desired objective is reached. The success of the "combined operations" of the present war still, however, as in the days of Drake whose words are adopted for a text of the film, rest on the ability of each man to continue a great endeavour "until it be thoroughly finished" and which "yieldeth the true Glory." When the film was made Japan had still to be defeated. There remains the conclusive and decisive chapter of world organization for peace to be written, as the commentator timely reminds us, before we can claim to the sight of that "true glory" which existed whereby a nurse who had been promoted to a higher grade was sometimes for 18 months afterwards receiving no financial benefit. This was caused by previous rulings that a nurse should not receive the higher salary on April 1 after promotion unless she had served six months in the higher position. The new rules state that if, the salary of the higher grade is going to be the same, excluding an 'acting' allowance, as the previous salary, the nurse shall receive an increment (other than long service increment) immediately on promotion. Further, she shall receive an increment, even if she has not served six months in the new position, on April 1, if her salary is no higher than if she had not been promoted. These recommendations take effect from publication (August, 1945) but a nurse promoted between August, 1943 and this date, although not receiving arrears, shall be placed at the point where she would be had the recommendations been in effect at the time.

Begging for Beds

NURSES who are about to take further training in London such as the Royal College of Nursing's courses in nursing administration, for health visitors, sister tutors and dietitians are having great difficulty in finding rooms and if they are not successful may not be able to start the autumn session this month. If anyone or any hospital or institution can offer accommodation in or near London, even if it be only bed and breakfast, it would be a great service if they would write with full particulars to the Director of the Education Department, the Royal College of Nursing, 1a, Henrietta Place, Cavendish Square, W.1. Some of the students are holders of scholarships, all are keen and anxious to carry on with their chosen careers and it would be a great loss to the profession if in this, the first scholastic year of peace, they were not able to qualify themselves for the more responsible posts where they are so badly needed now and where they will be in still greater demand in the National Health Service of the future.

Honouring Army Nurses

THE announcement last week of the award of the Royal Red Cross to Miss K. G. Hall, New Zealand Army Nursing Service, recalls the amount of work nurses from many parts of the Empire have done in Europe. Miss Hall, a sister, receives the honour for gallant and distinguished services in Italy where there have been several New Zealand hospitals. Also among recent honours are some of our own Army nurses who became associate members of the Royal Red Cross for their services in North-West Europe. They are: Q.A.I.M.N.S.—Miss E. C. L'Estrange, senior sister; Miss E. M. Kitchener and Miss C. Philip, sisters. T.A.N.S.—Miss H. D. B. Anderson, Miss C. S. M. N. P. Crane and Miss E. Lyon, sisters.

New Play on Florence Nightingale

"THE Spinster of South Street" at the King's Theatre, Hammersmith, throws little fresh light on the already well-illumined figure of Florence Nightingale but it gives Miss Jean Forbes-Robertson scope for a powerful and sympathetic piece of character acting. The author, R. F. Delderfield, with the aid of one of the few fictitious characters in the play, skilfully emphasizes an aspect of Miss Nightingale's life which is sometimes under-stressed. The "undisciplined nurse" (well-played by Miss Rosamond Burne), who was dismissed from St. Thomas' Hospital because of her hankerings after matrimony, returns 30 years later as matron of an Indian Hospital, bearing those statistics on nursing which are still Miss Nightingale's delight, and showing how much of the seed sown in early years fell on good ground. The cast is an exceptionally strong one, with Mr. Balliol Holloway at his best in the role of Dr. Sutherland and Mr. Anthony Pendrell as a lovable Sidney Herbert.

British Nurses Overseas

NEWS of the great work done by British nurses during the war years is now coming in from all quarters. Miss D. M. Feild, R.R.C., matron of the 84th Indian General Hospital, home on leave after nine years' service overseas, was at Arakan with the famous 14th Army and wears the Burma Star. In 1941 Miss Feild was matron of the No. 1 Burma General Hospital at Toungoo, which, after the Japanese had raided the district, was moved as the enemy advanced. A 600-bedded hospital was moved by bullock cart to Kalaw and evacuated again by the same method within a month. On another occasion a 1,000-bedded hospital had to be evacuated, this time by train, and a 48-hour journey took seven days to accomplish. Miss Feild first went out to Mandalay in the service of the Burmese Government as administrative sister and trained many Burmese nurses, as well as herself nursing the sick. Miss F. Sheridan, S.R.N., who has been nursing the victims of Belsen Camp declares that "Belsen had to be seen to be believed," but that the death roll is now only a fraction of what it was when the Allies took control. A hospital equipped with 1,200 beds had to cope with 17,000 people suffering from typhus, dysentery, tuberculosis, etcetera. Miss Sheridan was nursing in Normandy at the time of the battles of Caen and Falaise and afterwards in Belgium.

Scotland's Health Report

THE Annual Report issued by the Department of Health for Scotland contains many interesting facts and is in most respects very satisfactory. Diphtheria figures show an encouraging drop: in 1944 the total of confirmed notifications was 6,835 as against 15,069 in the epidemic year of 1940, and the number of deaths 183 as against 675; a most excellent advertisement for the immunization campaign. Cerebro-spinal fever which, at the beginning of the war, showed a sudden increase, has gradually declined from 2,580 confirmed cases, in 1940, to 518, in 1944. There has also been a decline in the total number of treatments given at centres for the treatment of venereal disease. In 1944 these totalled 7,812, as against 11,297 in 1942, when the national publicity campaign for public enlightenment was first launched. The Report records, however, that at the end of April, 1945 about 4,250 members of the Civil Nursing Reserve were employed in hospitals (2,900 as nursing auxiliaries), a decrease of 650 since March 1944. This was largely due to the recruitment of trained nurses for the Nursing Services of the Crown and of nursing auxiliaries of the British Red Cross Society for service with the Forces. The shortage of nurses in all classes of hospital service continues to be very serious, and the total numbers employed have diminished during the year. Tuberculosis hospitals are among the ones most affected, and in June 1945 the number of persons awaiting institutional treatment was 1,898, of which 1,710 were pulmonary cases.

THE TOXAEMIAS OF PREGNANCY—I.

By DOUGLAS MILLER, M.D. (Ed.), F.R.C.S. (Ed.), F.R.C.P. (Ed.), F.R.C.O.G.

Examination at a pre-natal clinic. Accurate knowledge and regular supervision of the patient's health in the months of pregnancy is important to early diagnosis of pre-eclampsia

PRE-eclampsia and eclampsia were formerly regarded as disorders in which the liver and, to a less extent, the kidneys and the central nervous system are disorganized in consequence of a hypothetical toxin of unknown nature and origin. In recent years increasing acceptance has been given to the view that eclamptic toxaemia is a manifestation of a general spasmodic vaso-constriction of the smaller arterioles and capillaries. This modern conception of the nature of eclampsia is based, in the first place, on the fact that the most constant and, as a rule, the earliest disturbance in pre-eclampsia is a rise in blood-pressure due to the increased peripheral circulatory resistance ; secondly, the existence of a wide-spread arteriolar spasm can be demonstrated directly by examination of the eye grounds and by observation, with the capillary microscope, of changes in the capillaries at the base of the finger nails ; thirdly, all the pathological changes of pre-eclampsia and eclampsia as well as all the clinical features, with the exception of oedema, can be explained on the basis of a generalized vascular spasm.

Clinical Features

The typical clinical features are :—

(1). Hypertension.—A rise in blood-pressure is generally the first, as it is the most constant and characteristic, indication of toxaemia. It is also the last symptom to disappear after the pregnancy is over. It is noteworthy, moreover, that in patients who subsequently develop pre-eclampsia the systolic blood-pressure level is frequently found to be variable and unstable, being abnormally sensitive to emotional and other stimuli. It is commonly found, for example, that the systolic pressure may drop by 20 points or more within a day or two after admission to hospital, with no treatment other than mental and physical rest. Another interesting and significant observation is the frequency with which a familial tendency to hypertension is noted in the case histories of toxic patients. It is probable that in such women, had pregnancy not occurred, hypertensive changes would have appeared in middle life ; pregnancy, however, supplies some unknown stimulus which brings to the surface a latent tendency to hypertension or aggravates it if already present.

(2). Oedema.—This is generally an early disturbance in pre-eclampsia. Its pathogenesis is debatable but it is probably unrelated to the peripheral vascular spasm. It is a symptom of great importance because of the general disturbance of function it causes, particularly if increased intra-cranial tension develops as the result of the cerebral tissues being affected. When oedema is pronounced it is really recognizable by the usual objective signs. Before these appear, however, evidence of water-retention is commonly provided by an abnormal gain in weight, and regular monthly weighing should be a routine item in ante-natal supervision.

(3) Headache.—This symptom varies greatly in its time of appearance and its constancy and severity. It is essentially due to increased intra-cranial tension from cerebral oedema and varies in intensity with the degree of oedema present. Commonly it is accompanied by dimness of vision from oedema of the optic disc. It is occasionally observed that a woman wakens in the morning with a severe headache and with her face oedematous and her sight impaired. After moving about for some hours the headache tends to pass off, her sight improves and her face becomes less puffy, while simultaneously her legs and ankles become increasingly swollen as, under the influence of gravity, the oedema leaves the upper and affects the lower part of the body.

(4). Albuminuria.—Evidence of disturbance of kidney function appears at a comparatively late stage in pre-eclampsia, for it is not until the vascular disturbance, which is the basis of the disorder, has been in progress for some time that it produces the ischaemia of the renal cortex which causes albuminuria and oliguria. It is essential to recognize that the kidney disturbance is secondary to the hypertension, not primary as formerly believed. Similarly, it is wrong and dangerous to assume that a toxaemia is not in progress because the urine is albumen-free. The presence of albumen is a comparatively late manifestation, and numerous cases are on record of severe toxaemia amounting even to eclampsia in which the urine remains clear throughout.

(5). Visual disturbance.—Reference has already been made to oedema of the optic disc as a cause of impairment of sight. A second and more serious factor which operates occasionally is contracture of the retinal arterioles, which is part of the generalized vascular spasm which is present. Where the hypertension is prolonged, structural narrowing of the retinal vessels may occur and, rarely, haemorrhage into and detachment of the retina takes place causing permanent loss of sight.

(6). Alimentary disturbance.—In severe cases verging on eclampsia, nausea and vomiting may occur. Such symptoms are probably cerebral in origin, the gastric upset being similar to that observed where for any reason, for example a cerebral tumour, the intra-cranial tension is increased.

(7). Foetus and placenta.—The general vascular spasm which is responsible for most of the symptoms of pre-eclampsia exerts serious effects on the foetus and placenta. Since the narrowing of the arterioles in the uterine wall permits only a restricted blood flow to the placenta, the nourishment and vitality of the foetus are impaired and the child is usually appreciably smaller than is normal for the period of gestation reached. Moreover, the vascular disturbance is commonly associated with placental infarcation, so that the amount of healthy placental tissue is occasionally restricted to an extent where it is insufficient for the requirements of the foetus and intra-uterine death occurs. Premature labour is also common.

Accidental haemorrhage is another incident which frequently adds materially to the dangers to mother and child. This complication is appreciably more frequent in toxic than in non-toxic pregnancies. Haemorrhage may occur anywhere in the body, for example in the liver or brain, as the result of endothelial degeneration in the arterioles and increased blood-pressure, but is specially common at the placental site where the vessels are not only embryonic and thin-walled but where also, bridging the potential gap between uterus and placenta, they are less well supported than elsewhere.

Differential Diagnosis

Pre-eclampsia, pregnancy complicated by essential hypertension, and pregnancy complicated by chronic glomerulo-nephritis, constitute a triad of hypertensive disturbances which may be difficult or even impossible to distinguish one from another. It may be impossible, for example, to place in its proper category a case admitted to hospital with severe hypertension and albuminuria, from whom a reliable past history cannot be obtained and who, for one reason or another, is not seen again after the lying-in period is completed. Fortunately, in most cases there is available an accurate knowledge of the patient's health prior to conception and in the early months of pregnancy, and as a rule it is possible to keep the patient under supervision for a period of months or, if necessary, years after delivery, and such information generally makes accurate diagnosis possible.

Pre-eclampsia has its principal and typical features : (a) normal good health at the time of conception and for some months thereafter ; (b) a rise in blood-pressure in the later months, accompanied or followed by oedema, albuminuria and other recognizable symptoms of toxaemia ; and (c) a rapid and generally complete disappearance of these symptoms after delivery.

In pregnancy complicated by essential hypertension, the blood-pressure may be known to have been raised before conception or early in pregnancy. Although there may be an aggravation of symptoms in the later months, typically the condition is unaffected by pregnancy, the only abnormal finding being that the blood-pressure remains at a uniformly high level throughout and does not subside after delivery.

Chronic glomerulo-nephritis complicating pregnancy may be readily diagnosed if the patient is known to have displayed its characteristic symptoms before conception or early in pregnancy or if there is a reliable history of antecedent acute nephritis. It has as its distinctive features :—(a) the development of such symptoms as lassitude, headache, oedema, anaemia and visual disturbance at an earlier stage in pregnancy than the symptoms of pre-eclampsia generally appear ; (b) a relatively higher blood-pressure level than is generally found in pre-eclampsia ; (c) structural cardio-vascular changes indicated especially by sclerotic radial and retinal arterioles and cardiac enlargement ; and (d) significant impairment of kidney function shown by standard tests.

Prognosis in Pre-eclampsia

The principal immediate danger in pre-eclampsia is a sudden, unpredictable exacerbation with the development of eclampsia. Although in most cases there is a gradual worsening in the patient's condition, so that there is a clear warning of progression towards the convulsive crisis, occasionally the latter develops with dramatic suddenness.

A second danger, fortunately less common, by which the lives of mother and child may be imperilled, is accidental haemorrhage, either external or concealed.

A third consideration, which inevitably and invariably invests all cases of pre-eclamptic toxaemia with anxiety, is the possibility of intra-uterine death from placental infarcation, and the concern of the attendant is not diminished by the fact that the danger of foetal death is not always proportionate to the severity of the toxaemia.

Remote Prognosis

The remote prognosis in pre-eclampsia is concerned with the patient's subsequent health and with the way in which she reacts to subsequent pregnancies. It is important, in the first place, to emphasize that, where recovery from pre-eclampsia is incomplete, the residual lesion is essentially one of chronic hypertensive cardio-vascular disturbance and not chronic nephritis. Such impairment of kidney function as may develop in consequence of pre-eclampsia is secondary to the basic vascular disturbance, not primary, and it is very rarely that any permanent kidney damage is sustained.

Cardio-Vascular Damage

While the frequency with which chronic hypertension follows pre-eclamptic toxaemia has been variously assessed by different writers, there is general agreement that in at least one case in four permanent cardio-vascular damage will be sustained. Careful statistical studies have shown that, among such women whose health has been permanently affected, about one-half will develop symptoms in subsequent pregnancies, whereas, among those whose recovery is clinically complete, the proportion whose later pregnancies will be complicated by toxaemia amounts to about one-third.

Book Reviews

THE INTELLIGENT PARENTS' MANUAL. By Florence Powdermaker, M.D., and Louise Grimes. (William Heinemann, 99, Great Russell Street, W.C.1., price 10s. 6d.)

This book, first published in America, under the title " Children in the Family," has been prepared for publication by Dr. Maurice Newfield. The task involved ' complete anglicization ' and has been well done.

In the chapter on ' The New Baby,' the authors wisely stress the danger of making the baby the centre of the household and subordinating everyone to the new comer. It is exceedingly bad for the child and is apt to spoil the happiness of the parents' marriage.

In the chapter on ' Feeding the Infant ' although the advantages of breast feeding are acknowledged, it is suggested that artificial feeding is so good that ' many women prefer not to nurse their infants.' It seems bad suggestion to say,' Even if she knows that she cannot continue to nurse for very long, or even if, from the start, she has to supplement with a bottle a day, it is still worth while for her to nurse her baby for a time." A long experience of managing breast feeding has convinced me that if the nurse is a firm believer in natural feeding and can inspire the mother with her own confidence in it and in her capability to feed, there are few failures. It is perfectly true that in a small number of cases the temperament of the mother is an almost insuperable obstacle and weaning may be preferable to unwilling nursing.

The authors are wise in saying that children should never be forced to eat. In the matter of ' bowel training ' my own experience has been very much that of the authors : Since the war, babies have stayed for a long period in our infants' ward and it has been interesting to find that two very young babies who, most willingly and quickly had a daily action in their pots ' lapsed ' at ten months and ceased to be ' clean ' ! Now at fourteen months, no notice having been taken, they are going back to being ' clean ' in this sense !

There is a good section on habits in the second year, and the advantages to the child of possessing brothers and sisters. Good advice is given on the handling of the various ages so that jealousy is not provoked. Fears, anxieties and early relationships are considered.

The authors are sensible about the question of bowel and bladder control and put them in their proper perspective. Many children get into a state of extreme nervousness over this if it is made too much of a business. It is a matter which needs kindness and understanding.

A long experience with small boys and girls in this country makes the quoted remarks about sex a little unreal but possibly they are more typical of American children. It is certainly wise to answer questions truthfully and simply as far as possible. It is generally realized nowadays that masturbation should not be treated as sinful and most intelligent people will agree with the remarks on this subject.

Adolescence has its own long chapters with much wise council.

One feels that the authors' attitude to religion cannot be the result of personal experience. They seem to fear that religion will frighten children and act as a repressive influence. A child brought up by an intelligent Christian mother and father is helped and strengthened by the practice of religion. It is a difficult task but there is something very far wrong with the religion which is mainly concerned with repressions and not with the fullness of life and joy.

The three appendices will be found very useful with their lists of organizations concerned with children. This book may be heartily recommended to all parents.

Letters to a Nurse

By a Midland Doctor (Staple Press Ltd., John Bale Medical Publications Ltd., 3s.)

These letters have been brought up to date and republished but it is questionable whether the necessarily scrappy information they contain is a good way for the young nurse to learn about her profession. There are good suggestions for overcoming fatigue, excessive discipline and other common troubles of hospital life.

THE SECOND FLOOR

Plan of the second floor of the York Clinic, showing the central corridor with four single rooms, and two three-bedded cubicles on one side and a pleasant room for occupational therapy and recreation, rooms for doctor and sister and the usual offices on the other not with modern furniture all of a pattern, but with a variety of pieces of homely and antique furniture. The patients on this floor come and go freely, perhaps going to their work in town each day and coming back at night for psychiatric treatment, while returning to the normal routine of life. The second and third floors accommodate somewhat more severe cases, again in single rooms and cubicles. The fourth floor is reserved for patients requiring more strict observation. This floor is built on a similar plan, but sitting room and dining rooms are under observation from the sister's duty recess by means of glass windows. There is provision for the giving of continuous bath therapy, electric convulsion, insulin and other treatments. To overcome inevitable curtailment of freedom there is a protected balcony so that long-stay patients may get fresh air and sunshine. On the roof there is a sun parlour with comfortable chairs and ping-pong and billiards table: a large part of the roof forms a well-protected open space for exercise, and there sister has already the beginnings of a roof garden.

In the basement there is a dining room to serve patients from the first, second and third floors, and also a room equipped for occupational therapy of all kinds, including pottery. There is a kitchen here, too, to cook for the block, close at hand so that the food can readily be freshly cooked, served hot and carried by food lift to patients on the fourth floor.

The clinic opened about a year ago and already over 250 cases have passed through its wards. It has the advantage of freedom from any association with the mental hospital, and therefore it is more easy to get patients to come early of their own free will: this may account for the high proportion of persons who have been discharged, recovered or improved.

The block is in charge of sisters who have both general and mental training, with Sister Purcell, trainee of Guy's Hospital and Bexley Heath Hospital at its head: student nurses in their general training are able, through it, to get experience in psychiatric nursing within their parent hospital, an opportunity which is invaluable and open to the trainees of no other general hospital in the country. The nurses in the block receive lectures in psychology and also take part in clinical discussions on the various cases in their charge with the psychiatrists and with the sister tutor to the York Clinic, Miss M. E. Scott, who holds the Sister Tutor Certificate of the Royal College of Nursing.

Work in the block is voluntary, but those who chose to do it have found it most helpful for the added knowledge of psychology, helps them to deal better with all their patients.

Presentation to Miss Wilmshurst

THE Cowdray Hall at the Royal College of Nursing was packed on September 1, when a cheque for £533 was presented to Miss M. Wilmshurst, the retiring General Superintendent of the Queen's Institute of District Nursing. Miss M. Ross, Superintendent of Woolwich, was in the chair and spoke of the great love, loyalty and deep respect which they had for Miss Wilmshurst, and she spoke for all nurses and superintendents when she said, "we know she will always be our friend." The cheque was presented by Miss Wynne Edwards, Superintendent of the Worcestershire Central Nursing Association, on behalf of all Queen's nurses and superintendents.

In reply, Miss Wilmshurst said that for the first time in thirteen years she felt speechless, but would like to thank both them and her staff for the way in which they had worked with and for her, and been "blast walls," protecting her from many a dangerous storm.

WHERE NURSING IS ESSENTIAL

DURING the period November, 1944, to January, 1945, 110 British patients suffering from scrub typhus were treated in a forward Indian general hospital.....In no disease is the physician less important, except as a guiding force, and the nurse more essential. These particular patients were fortunate in having a ward sister who accepted this from the start and gave up practically all her "off duty" time week after week. Nursing must be intensive and continuous, without which many patients who otherwise would live will inevitably die. An adequate diet was maintained—a minimum of 2,400 calories daily, including 100 g. of first-class proteins— and dehydration and salt depletion were combated. Most patients, with sufficient encouragement, took fluid and semi-solid nutriment by mouth. If not, the transnasal intragastric Ryle's tube was employed. Intravenous fluids tended to aggravate the respiratory symptoms, and in any case were of use only in a grave emergency. Vitamin concentrates, of A,B,C, and D were available and were given to all patients as a routine. Since these patients came from a highly malarious area, a full course of mepacrine was given from the date of admission, followed by suppressive treatment. Pressure points and oral hygiene required constant attention. Rest in bed was enforced till the pulse rate settled to normal (usually 10 to 12 days after the temperature touched normal), and then patients were allowed to get up and move about gradually. Symptomatic Treatment—Insomnia, due usually to intense headache, was treated with potassium bromide, chloral hydrate, each 15 gr. and tr. opii, m. 15; or paraldehyde 6-8 c.cm. intramuscularly in severe cases. Paraldehyde by mouth was usually not tolerated. Hiccup was difficult to manage, and responded best, even though only temporarily, to inhalations of CO^2 and Oxygen. Cyanosis and respiratory distress responded well to continuous oxygen administration, though this treatment had to be continued as long as three days in some cases. Patients with meningitic symptoms were lumbar-punctured, principally from the diagnostic point of view. Removal of cerebrospinal fluid did not appear to alleviate the symptoms—From "Scrub Typhus as a War Disease" by Major-General Sir John W.D. Megaw, K.C.I.E., D.Sc., M.B., in the British Medical Journal.

INTERESTING CASE—6.

Acute Leukaemia

By NORAH BINNEY,
Student Nurse, Salford Royal Hospital

THE patient, who belonged to the R.A.A.F., aged 21 years, was admitted to the ward at 8 p.m. on January 23 last, with the following diagnosis: agranulocytosis following pneumonia treated by sulphonamides."

His history revealed that he had been on flying duties until six weeks previously, when he developed severe headaches, and attacks of dizziness, also some degree of faintness. Consequently he was taken off flying duties and later he developed pneumonia. The sulphonamides seemed to arrest the pneumococci, but the patient was still very weak, and the least attempt to do anything was followed by some degree of dyspnoea. There was also long standing thirst.

On admission temperature, pulse and respiration were increased, the skin markedly pale, lips and buccal mucosa blanched. On his face and chest were many pustules. His gums bled easily, so did one of the "spots" which had the top rubbed off. His mouth was rather dry, tongue reddish and slightly swollen. He complained of a sore throat which was mildly injected. The spleen was not palpable, neither were any of the other glands. There was some dyspnoea present on exertion. Blood slides and a sternal puncture were done for diagnostic purposes. He already knew his blood group to be group IV.

Continued Thirst

A blood transfusion was commenced at 10 p.m. in the left leg, running at the rate of approximately 30 drops per minute. At the time he complained of severe thirst, which was relieved by frequent sips of nourishing fluids, such as Ovaltine; he had a fairly restful night, after having an injection of morphia, gr. ¼. By 10 a.m. the next morning, the second pint of blood had been run through. The results of the previous days' tests were returned, which revealed:— haemoglobin, 24 per cent.; colour index, 1.09; red blood cells, 1,120,000; mean diameter 7.6 u.; white blood cells, 8,100 per c.mm. Differential white count: polymorphs, 37 per cent.; lymphocytes, 30 per cent.; monocytes, 1 per cent.; immature polymorphs (myeloblasts), 32 per cent. The marrow film showed that the marrow was packed with myeloblasts. Another three pints of blood were given, the patient was still thirsty, but there seemed to be some improvement in his general condition, and less bleeding from his mouth and gums, his appetite improved and he did not complain of a sore throat. He was put on a course of Fersolate tablets, one three times a day, also vitamin C., 100 mgm., three times a day.

On January 26, after five pints of blood had been given, the results of the blood count were: haemoglobin, 26 per cent.; white blood cells, 9,800. Differential white count: polymorphs, 58 per cent.; lymphocytes, 28 per cent.; monocytes, 2 per cent.; immature polymorphs (myeloblasts), 12 per cent. An X-ray of chest revealed nothing abnormal. A series of crops of pustules which had appeared on his face and chest disappeared, and the yellowish tinge to the skin was also disappearing and a faint pinkish colour was present. The next day the results of the blood count were haemoglobin, 24 per cent.; white blood cells, 9,800. Differential white count: polymorphs, 64 per cent.; lymphocytes, 20 per cent.; myeloblasts, 16 per cent.

Some General Improvement

No further blood was given until January 30. During this time the patient seemed to be improving slightly, and he had a definite interest in things. His temperature, pulse and respiration which had been more or less increased were settling down to normal. By this time he was on light diet. Another eight pints of blood were started, and the haemoglobin and red blood cells increased markedly.

On February 1 the blood count revealed: red blood cells, 1,440,000. The following day the haemoglobin was 46 per cent.

and the red blood cells, 2,100,000; both were again up the following day: red blood cells, 3,100,000; haemoglobin, 66 per cent. General improvement was maintained, and full diet was given and fluids ad lib. The patient was bright and cheery, and slept well at night. He was able to wash and shave himself without getting tired from the exertion. The Fersolate and vitamin C were discontinued. He had now developed a cough and was put on Mistura expectorans cum chlorodyne, ½ oz., four hourly. The cough disappeared in a few days. Practically all pustules had gone from his face and chest, and the skin was getting back to normal colour.

A full blood count was taken on February 5, which revealed haemoglobin, 76 per cent.; colour index, 0.8; red blood cells, 4,420,000; mean diameter 7.0u; white blood cells, 7,000. Differential white count: polymorphs, 48 per cent.; lymphocytes, 42 per cent.; monocytes, 4 per cent.; myeloblasts, 6 per cent. This was considered comparatively good, and the patient was allowed up for half an hour that evening, with no ill effects. A short course of Hepamino, one tablespoonful was given with soup or water, daily, but it seemed only to give slight benefit.

By this time he had been diagnosed as acute leukaemia. His blood count had improved greatly since he had his last blood transfusion. On February 9, the blood count showed a definite decrease in the granular cells indicating that the bone marrow was not functioning properly. It was as follows: haemoglobin, 76 per cent.; colour index, 0.9; red blood cells, 3,910,000; mean diameter, 7.0 u; white blood cells, 5,000. Differential white count: polymorphs, 36 per cent.; lymphocytes, 60 per cent,; immature cells, 4 per cent.

Decrease in White Cells

A localized inflammation of the median basilic veins developed in each arm, where the patient had had the transfusions. These were treated with applications of Antiphlogistine and the arms elevated. They soon responded to treatment, and the inflammation quickly subsided. He complained of the glands of neck feeling "lumpy" on February 14, and there was slight cervical adenitis present, otherwise he felt comfortable and took his diet well. Next day, the blood count results were: haemoglobin, 60 per cent.; colour index, 0.78; red blood cells, 3,800,000; mean diameter, 7.2u; white blood cells, 2,600. A platelet count showed 101,000 per c.mm., which was also a decrease.

Marked cervical adenitis had developed, also a really sore throat, and a dry, shiny, red tongue. The patient also complained of not feeling so well. He had several attacks of epistaxis. The cervical adenitis was treated with Antiphlogistine, and the mouth was treated frequently, as both the mouth and throat were so sore. Only a nourishing fluid diet was possible; it was given two hourly, followed by mouth washes of sodium phenate solution. The lips were swollen and sore, and very

OPHTHALMIC PROBLEMS IN INDUSTRY*

By JOSEPH MINTON, F.R.C.S., Major, R.A.M.C., Ophthalmic Surgeon to Hampstead General Hospital and Queen Elizabeth Hospital for Children; Assistant Ophthalmic Surgeon to the West End Hospital for Nervous Diseases, London

WITH the expansion of the Industrial Medical Services has come the realization that the industry presents many visual problems which have to be faced and eventually solved. So far, although this country has made no unified attempt to deal with the vision of employees, individual firms have done so. In 1938 the Industrial Welfare Society sent out a questionnaire to its 750 member firms in order to find out whether applicants for employment had to pass eyesight tests and what minimum visual standards were considered necessary. From the replies received from 398 firms, employing about 1,000,000 workers, it was found that most firms do not insist on eyesight tests ; and that the many firms who are vision-conscious vary in their approach to the problem. Thus, while many small firms do not require employees to pass eyesight tests, firms representing the same branch of industry insist on them. A large number of firms have instituted eyesight tests demanding a visual standard of 6/6 or 6/9 in each eye, while other firms are satisfied with 6/12 in each eye.

For Greater Efficiency

In this paper an attempt is made to elucidate some of the principles which may guide industrial medical officers in the selection of employees for various jobs in industry. There is no doubt that greater efficiency will be achieved in industry if we place the workers in jobs for which they are best fitted physically. This would eventually be followed by a larger output in production and would in addition ensure the safety of the workers in many branches of industry. However, under present conditions of employment, a countrywide compulsory medical examination could not be instituted for all workers. Should such an examination be carried out a huge pool of physically unfit would be created whose members would have to be re-trained and then placed in suitable employment. This is a big problem which it is hoped will be tackled in the future. A number of private firms have already adopted the principle of a compulsory medical examination of employees and the direction of workers into jobs for which they are best suited physically. This policy which is ideal if carried out in combination with the training of the physically handicapped must be put on a sound medical basis.

The Factories Act of 1937 provides that juveniles (14—16) should be examined by the surgeon and an eyesight test be carried out. The general examination of the workers must be thorough ; the examining surgeon should be able to refer cases to consultants for special examination. At present the examining surgeon is given no instructions as to the visual standards required in the various branches of industry and in most cases he has no facilities for the efficient examination of the vision of the juveniles. It is essential that the examining surgeon and the industrial medical officer should use a Snellen's type at 20 feet when the workers' vision is tested, and should the vision of the applicant for employment be less than 6/12 in each eye he should be referred to an ophthalmic surgeon. The medical boards examining all men for war service refer those whose vision is less than 6/12 in each eye to an ophthalmic surgeon for an opinion. The same procedure might well be followed by the examining surgeon and the industrial medical officer. The ophthalmic surgeon would then report on the vision of the individual as corrected with glasses. The visual standards laid down by the Army, Navy and Air Force are based on the vision of the individual corrected with glasses. In special jobs in the Navy and for air crews in the Air Force as well as in the case of drivers of public vehicles (trains, buses and trams) high visual standards without glasses are demanded. For all workers in industry the use of glasses presents no handicap and the efficiency of the worker is in no way diminished by their use. On the other hand investigations in the various branches of industry have shown that workers whose vision has been satisfactorily corrected with glasses have suffered from fewer symptoms of eyestrain when engaged at work than the workers who have not had an ophthalmic examination. Any reference therefore to the vision of an individual should imply the vision corrected if necessary with glasses.

Suggested Visual Groups in Industry

Modern industry is capable of employing men and women with all grades of vision—from Grade 1, with the highest vision, to the partially and even totally blind. The standards of vision required in industry need not be rigid, but should vary according to the jobs assigned to workpeople in the factory. For purposes of classification all occupations can be divided into four groups. In the first group are the occupations which require especially good eyesight, such as the very close work necessary in the manufacture of silk yarns, silk hose, inspection and manufacture of electric light bulbs and radio valves, watch making, invisible mending and jewel work. In the second group are the industrial occupations and distributive trades which require normal eyesight. In the third group are those occupations suitable for those with weak eyesight, such as cookery, soapmaking, gardening or billposting. In the fourth group are the trades in which blind people are employed: brush making, basket work, piano tuning, physiotherapy, and many others. A more detailed classification of the visual standards required in industry is given below. The following grades of vision are suggested in allocating applicants for employment, whether juveniles or not, to various occupations.

Grade 1 vision.—To this group belong all those possessing 6/6 or 6/9 vision in each eye and also those having 6/6 in one eye and not less than 6/36 in the other eye. Individuals in this group are fit for all occupations.

Grade 2 vision.—This group includes individuals having not less than 6/12 in each eye and also those having 6/12 in one eye and not less than 6/36 in the other eye. Workpeople with Grade 2 vision are fit for all industrial occupations except for the very close work essential in the manufacture and inspection of radio valves, electric lamps, certain silk yarn trades and a few others. Grade 2 vision is sufficient for all clerical work, the engineering industry, and the driving of vehicles.

Grade 3 vision.—In this group are all people with one eye or one defective eye, who have 6/6, 6/9 or 6/12 in the good eye, and less than 6/36 in the other eye, or who have one blind eye. Those with 6/6 in the good eye are fit for all occupations even for those which require fine close work. The one-eyed who have 6/9 or 6/12 vision can be engaged in most trades and industries. Certain occupations such as coalmining, and certain operations in the engineering trades such as hammering, chipping, turning, milling, etcetera, present a greater danger of injury to the eyes. It is therefore suggested that one-eyed workers should not be engaged in coalmining or any of the above-mentioned engineering operations.

Grade 4 vision.—To this group belong the workpeople who have 6/24 vision in each eye, or 6/24 in one eye and 6/36 in the other eye. People with grade 4 vision can be employed in all outdoor occupations, building trades, carpentry, dock labour, portering, and many other like trades.

Grade 5 vision.—To this group belong the blind and partially blind and all individuals with less than 6/36 vision in either eye can be included. The National Institute for the Blind has issued several pamphlets dealing with the employment of the blind. They show how since the beginning of the war the blind and partially blind have been employed in hundreds of industrial occupations: (1) assembling of petrol tanks, crash helmets, ball bearings, etcetera; (2) bakery work; (3) boot-repairing; (4) catering; (5) clerical work; (6) engineering; (7) machine operating, and several others.

This subdivision of workpeople into five visual groups is meant to be a guide only, for the industrial medical officer will often come across workmen with 6/24 vision in each eye doing excellent work in the engineering trades where a higher vision should be required. Vision is only one of the factors necessary in the make-up of the skilled worker. High intelligence and experience often counterbalance the handicaps which arise from a poor visual acuity. Such people should not be turned away from their jobs for in the selection of the right man for each job the total mental and physical make-up of the individual should be the guide.

Close Work

Fine work at close range presents a special problem in industry. Radio valve manufacture, electric lamp inspection and manufacture, fine weaving and silk hose manufacture necessitate working at ten inches or even less from the job. This requires a constant accommodation effort and convergence to a greater degree than does ordinary clerical work. In the selection of workers for these jobs greater attention should be paid to a full investigation of vision. The visual acuity required is 6/6 or 6/9 in each eye. The muscle balance and binocular vision should also be investigated. A Maddox wing can be used for measuring the muscle balance of the eyes for near vision and a Worth's amblyoscope is a very convenient instrument for estimating the degree of binocular vision (fusion, stereopsis, and convergence). Both instruments are small and cheap. Industrial medical officers are not usually fully acquainted with the details and interpretation of muscular imbalance. It would therefore be advisable that an investigation by an opthhalmic surgeon be carried out on all individuals engaged or likely to be engaged on such work. Young men and women with a high error of refraction (latent hypermetropia) will often have 6/6 vision but will suffer from headaches when engaged at close work. In all such cases a routine examination by an ophthalmic surgeon would lead to a correction of refractive errors and of muscle imbalance and thus would prevent headaches and eyestrain from which workers often suffer. As a general rule one can state that individuals with refractive errors, if properly corrected with glasses, suffer no discomfort when engaged at close work. Older workers wearing glasses to correct their presbyopia are just as efficient as younger workers. Investigations of the Industrial Fatigue Research Board in 1927 and 1928 (Weston and Adams) have shown that persons engaged in very fine close work suffer from eyestrain which is in many cases relieved by the wearing of spectacles provided with strong prism (base in) to relieve the excessive convergence. These investigations have been confirmed and in some factories these spectacles which are also provided with a magnifying lens are issued to the workers, but of course they are not always worn. Dr. L. B. Bourne recently reported on the procedure in careful selection of workers employed in radio valve manufacture which involves close work on very fine parts. Employees are graded according to their distant and near vision, and on the degree of muscle balance of the eyes. Employees who have exophorias or esophorias greater than five prism dipotres are not put on very fine close work. The adoption of this procedure has been followed by very satisfactory results. Only a very small number of workers, about 2 per cent., have complained and asked to be transferred to another section of the factory where such fine close work is not necessary.

Recent research in binocular vision has shown that not only phorias but also poor stereoscopic vision may often be responsible for symptoms of eyestrain. The conclusions reached in "A Study of a Selected Group of Women Employed on Extremely Fine Work" (Ida Mann and Dorothy Archibald) are that to be able to continue fine close work without fatigue, one should have a well-developed stereoscopic sense and good muscle balance for the near point. As a general guide one could recommend that employees engaged in very fine, close work should not have hyperphoria. The exophoria or esophoria must not be greater than five prism dioptres. They should have good stereoscopic vision in addition to a corrected visual acquity of 6/6 or 6/9 in each eye. It is interesting to note that one-eyed workers with 6/6 vision in the good eye can continue working comfortably in occupations involving fine close work. Such careful selection of workers for fine close work should be done in factories, training and rehabilitation centres, by ophthalmic surgeons who should have the assistance of an orthoptist who might carry out treatment of individuals with small degrees of muscle imbalance and poor stereoscopic vision but who are otherwise fit and willing.

Myopia

The ophthalmic surgeon is often asked by myopes and parents of short sighted adolescents whether it is safe for them to carry on with clerical work or any other type of close work. There is no evidence that close work has any effect on the progress of myopia. In the past ophthalmologists held the view that close work caused a deterioration of the sight of myopes (a progression of myopia). Recent investigations have not confirmed this opinion. Myopes whose vision with glasses is 6/6 or 6/9 in each eye can carry on comfortably with fine close work (needlework, weaving, etcetera.). Myopes with 6/12 vision in each eye are fit for all types of clerical work. Adolescents suffering from myopia, whose corrected vision is less than 6/9 in each eye at the age of 16, should be advised against taking up close work, as with the natural progress of myopia between the ages of 16 and 25 there is a likelihood of their vision further deteriorating. At the age of 21 they might have 6/18 vision only and find themselves unable to carry on with clerical work or any other type of close work with comfort. The selection of a suitable job by a high myope in adolescence will obviate many years of wasted training

The railway companies insist that employees who are training as firemen and later as engine drivers, should have, on entering their service, 6/6 vision in each eye without glasses. Many young men with a latent hypermetropia of 2 or 3 dioptres have 6/6 vision in each eye without glasses and pass the necessary eyesight tests required by the railway companies. At the age of 40 their latent hypermetropia becomes manifest and their vision without glasses drops to 6/18. When re-examined at this age their vision is below the required standards without glasses, although their vision with glasses is 6/6 in each eye. These men are refused promotion from firemen to acting drivers and are given lower grade jobs with loss of wages. The same applies to drivers of public vehicles who are not allowed to go on driving. They have wasted many valuable years in training for a high grade job and at middle age are refused promotion. This could have been prevented had an ophthalmologist examined their eyes before they had taken up employment. The railways and other public transport companies should not employ men who are to be trained as drivers if their latent hypermetropia is 2 dioptres or over.

The selection of workers for suitable jobs is one of the great problems to be solved. With the co-operation of the industrial medical officers, ophthalmologists, psychologists and safety officers a great deal may be accomplished.

Trees, Health and Planning

"FINE trees make fine men." Richard St. Barbe Baker, founder of the "Men of the Trees" society, was speaking to an enthusiastic audience during his luncheon address to the Town and Country Planning Association. His subject was "The Place of Trees in Town and Country Planning"; he explained in how many ways the health and happiness of a community could be connected with its forests. Forests meant the presence of skilled foresters who, by reason of their healthy life, were generally fine men. But that was only one small part of the gift of the trees to human life.

Trees purified the air. Mr. St. Barbe Baker spoke of hospitals in the United States which were tree-surrounded. It was found that the patients, especially surgical and chest patients, recovered more quickly where there were forest areas. Towns surrounded by trees often escaped epidemics; trees maintained a balanced ecology; a forest consisted not only of trees but of a whole balanced community of living things, flora and fauna, each depending for its healthy existence on the others.

Creative Industry

Prosperity and happiness in creative work could be achieved by using local timber for local industries. Mr. St. Barbe Baker told how he had asked in a toy shop in Welwyn Garden City, a planned village with well-kept woodland areas, to see toys made from local timber. None could be produced. In contrast he described village industries which, before the war, had grown from the forests of Weisbaden. Whole families co-operated in making attractive wooden articles, for example the bright sectional snakes with red tongues that tourists loved to buy. At the beginning of the 1914-18 war there were 400 known uses for timber; at the end of the same war the figure had risen to 4,000 and many more uses had been found since then.

Farmers had been tempted to fell their trees by the high price of timber. This was a short-sighted policy. Britain's agricultural system was built on small fields surrounded by trees and hedges, and by this system we could produce twice as much food from the same acreage as American farmers. The trees shed leaves which rotted and became compost, keeping the land "in good heart." Trees retained moisture and prevented erosion. Mr. St. Barbe Baker gave a horrible picture of the dusty, eroded, treeless fields of Dakota where a man's farm might blow away in a night. The black dust, the rich top-soil of the fields, would blow across the continent until it was found in New York and even on board Atlantic Steamers.

Water Supplies

Then forest catchment areas were essential for an adequate water supply. However we may plan, no city could expand beyond its water supply. Each city should have its afforested catchment area. At present such towns as Bournemouth and Swanage were drawing water from the porous chalk hills, where the forests had been destroyed, at a colossal pace. Farms were suffering in consequence.

Britain, Mr. St. Barbe Baker pointed out, was the worst afforested country in Europe. Whereas 50 per cent. of Sweden and Norway, 26 per cent. of Germany, 25 per cent. of France and 18 per cent. of Belgium were afforested, only 4½ per cent of Britain was devoted to trees. There was a real danger to health in this low level and our woodlands had suffered still more in the war. Woodland was moreover an unequalled way of storing wealth on the land. Trees stood high in a small area and, unlike wheat, needed no barns.

For the Future

Having made his case for the trees, Mr. St. Barbe Baker turned to the question of what we should do about it. He put the necessary afforested area in any plan as high as one acre of trees per family although the practicability of this was queried in the discussion which followed. Forests should be planned for a hundred years ahead and they should be planned on a broad national basis. Building should be done in relation to the woodlands. Forests should never be clean-felled but rather worked on a sustained year basis, some trees being felled to benefit the others, and felling and planting being carried on side by side in proper rotation. Mr. St. Barbe Baker made a plea for planting the ancient hardwood trees, such as oaks which took three hundred years to mature, the broad-leaved trees rather than quickly maturing conifers. He remarked that the richest civilizations existed where broad-leaved trees were grown; conifer country was generally poor. Tree planting, he concluded, was a sign of true citizenship which can plan beyond the individual life for the future.

All who contributed to the discussion concentrated on the severely practical aspects of forestry but it was clear that each speaker was also a lover of trees, and the beautiful photographs which surrounded the hall reminded one of the more subtle psychological value of trees in that they give spaciousness and dignity to man's environment.

WITH A MORAL—AND WITHOUT

THE members of the Hospital Savings Association, at their annual summer meeting were fortunate in having the two aspects of medicine and surgery represented by Lord Moran and Mr. Souttar, F.R.C.S. Each spoke with authority on the developments of his own work, but we all love a story, and it was perhaps in each case the anecdotes illustrating the little personal encounters that best brought home the range and interest of the subject. Making his point as to the need for more study of the mental problems of the patient, Lord Moran told an amusing story of an encounter between Sir A. Paget and Archer, the famous jockey, who had hurt his leg and who asked how long it would be before he could get about again. "Oh, about three weeks," was the reply. "Three weeks—but I've got to ride to Epsom in a fortnight!" Sir A. Paget, quite oblivious of the facts and all that was involved, then asked, "But must you really ride to Epsom, can't you drive there?"

Pathos and . . .

Mr. Souttar's stories had no moral—unless the infinite variety and pathos and grit of human nature is in itself a moral. The first was of an old woman who had been sent to him with a lump on her breast, of which both she and her doctor had feared the worst. When she was finally assured that her fears were groundless, that the dreaded cancer was not present, her face was transformed with relief—an understandable reaction. But with her it was not a mere release from fear. She produced from her bag a card and held it out for him to see. It was a blood donor's card, showing that she had given seven transfusions. Her worry had been not for herself, but at the thought that she might have passed on the disease. Assured that this could not be so, she went out full of happiness, her card clutched in her hand, content in the knowledge that she could still go on making a gift of health to others.

Humour

The second story was the most endearing of all. A small boy had to have a very difficult operation performed to the nerve of his right hand in order to save the use of it. The operation satisfactorily concluded, he was being discharged. But there is, Mr. Souttar explained, a simple test used to tell whether the full use of the hand is restored. It is to take a piece of paper in both hands and pull as though to pull it apart. By the position of the thumbs in action it is possible to tell if the patient has recovered the full use of the hand. Mr. Souttar explained all this to the boy, showed what was wanted and told him that when he could hold the paper as he himself did, he would give him half-a-crown. The boy went off and the surgeon saw no more of him. A year later, however, he re-appeared at the clinic, walked into the room and without saying a word went up to the table, took up a piece of paper between his two hands in the correct way and looked up at the surgeon, waiting, still without a word. The surgeon made no comment, but felt in his pocket, pulled out half-a-crown and handed it over the table to the lad. Still silent, the boy took it, put it in his pocket, ending the little drama to the complete amazement of the amazed medical students standing by, with his exit, still without a word.

Obituaries

Miss F. Coops

It is with deep regret that we record the death of Miss Freda Coops, student nurse, of The Royal Hospital, Sheffield. Miss Coops was in her second year of training, and her loss is keenly felt by all.

Miss M. M. Mackenzie

We regret to announce the death of Miss M. Mackenzie, trainee (1919) and for many years theatre sister at York County Hospital. Mr. Lawton, chairman of the hospital, said that, "to thousands upon thousands of our citizens called to face the ordeal of an operation during the last 20 years or more, her cheerful personality, her skilful attention and, above all, her courage and resourcefulness must have carried a reassurance which was very precious and comforting to them."

Mi's H. Butcher

We regret to announce the death at Lyme Regis Hospital, Dorset, on August 8, of Miss Hilda Butcher, who had been for many years Queen's District Nurse in that area.

For the Convalescent

I am writing to stress the very real and present needs of the convalescent patient. Now that the immediate danger to life and limb from enemy action is passed, the more insidious evils of war are making their presence felt with renewed persistence. The sudden release from acute anxiety has in many cases accentuated the sense of weariness and strain so general at this time. Difficulties of catering, housing and transport are aggravated by shortage of labour, long hours and the almost total absence of domestic help. When, in addition to all this, there comes the personal crisis of a serious illness or operation, the resources of the patient are strained almost to breaking point.

The great shortage of hospital beds means that in many instances he or she must be discharged before being really able to battle with the demands and difficulties of everyday life. Often, too, particularly in the case of the breadwinner, there is a reduction in income—a strong incentive to return to work prematurely. This is especially true if he is recuperating at home and so adding to the expense of the family. Nor should the great needs of the patient whose troubles are mental rather than physical be forgotten; frequently a rest and change may do much to re-establish normal health.

Surely the answer to all these problems is the convalescent home, but now, when the need is greatest, the shortage of homes is acute. Many closed on account of the war are not yet open, while war-time emergency homes are now closing.

This is a problem that must be tackled here and now and need not await government action, welcome though that will be when it comes. Homes run with imagination and skill for every type of patient are urgently needed. Only if they are provided will the convalescent reap the full benefit of his hospital treatment and return to everyday life truly refreshed.

Nurses, practising and otherwise, can do two things: 1. arouse public opinion to the great need of good convalescent homes; 2. offer a few weeks' hospitality to patients direct from hospital.

Those who are in a position to do the latter should write to me giving full details of the type of patient taken, charges and the facilities offered. This will be work of real reconstruction, and its value can hardly be overestimated.

Hospital Almoners' Association
Joint Sub-committee on Convalescence.

Qualification of Non-medical Supervisors of Midwives

Now that the training of various members of the nursing profession is under review and in the melting pot, it might be useful to consider whether the time is not ripe to institute some course of instruction or training for midwives with the necessary qualifications, who wish to become non-medical supervisors of midwives. At the present time the possession of the qualification S.R.N., and the certificate of the C.M.B., together with recent midwifery experience including a specified period in domiciliary practice, appears to be all that is required for the Ministry of Health to recognise a person as a non-medical supervisor of midwives. It has been mooted recently that the Midwives Teachers Certificate should be an added qualification, but unless the holder of such a certificate has had practical teaching experience in a Part 2 Training School, the possession of this qualification does not appear to meet the bill.

Supervision of midwives is very largely among those midwives engaged in domiciliary practice, who may be working for a local authority, a voluntary organization, or independently; also a number of midwives working in small nursing homes. Midwives practising in larger institutions are not individually supervized in exactly the same manner.

The work of a non-medical supervisor of midwives should consist largely of advice and encouragement, and of co-ordination and co-operation whilst keeping the midwives up to date with methods, technique and any new regulations which are issued from time to time. It, therefore, might be considered whether a short course of a month or two could not be usefully instituted in which a would-be non-medical supervisor of midwives could accompany an experienced non-medical supervisor of midwives in her duties, working in a well organized area, whether rural or urban would not particularly matter, but a local supervising authority which covered both types of area would provide the best training ground. Such a course might follow a personality test, and precede examination on the duties covered by the non-medical supervisor, organized by the C.M.B.

Now that the Rushcliffe Committee has given such status and recognition to non-medical supervisors of midwives there should be no lagging behind in achieving the high level which this type of work demands.

E. K. TRILLWOOD.
Superintendent Health Visitor and Non-Medical Supervisor of Midwives, Essex County Council.

MEMORIAL SERVICE

We regret to announce the death of Miss Ann Bancroft (formerly a Ward Sister at the Bolton Royal Infirmary) of 51, Deeplish Road, Rochdale. She was 55 years of age. After 34 years in the nursing profession, 22 of which had been spent as a Sister at Bolton, Miss Bancroft retired only a fortnight before her death. She was greatly esteemed by all who knew her and the presence at the funeral of so many representatives of the Bolton Royal Infirmary's life bore testimony to this. A memorial service was held in St. Augustine's Church, Tonge Moor, Bolton.

People and Planning

SPEAKING on "Planning for Individuals" at a Town and Country Planning Association lunch time meeting recently, Mr. Harold Conolly, A.R.I.B.A., pointed out that the less planning there was in vacuo the better. Too often ratepayers took no notice of Government plans till it was too late. Some were too lazy and some were too stupid to care. But a good two-foot rule, Mr. Conolly said, read from both ends. Planning must perforce take place at the highest levels, but through what channels did the Government find out what the people wanted and what they were prepared to pay? There was personal contact with the officers of the various County Councils, such organized enquiries as the ballot poll, the postal ballot and social surveys like those conducted by the Ministry of Information. But there was still a gap that needed bridging. His suggestion was to establish a chain of civic societies which could complete the contact and act as collecting centres for local information, combining something of the functions of the citizen's advice bureaus in the solution of personal difficulties with the work of those societies concerned to uphold ideals and improve taste in matters of civic concern. Tenants' associations and Women's Institutes could be of great help in getting facts on the social aspect and the many existing societies such as the Birmingham and Merseyside Civic Societies could help with regard to layout and design. Such a chain of societies, as well as providing authentic data, could act as a check on any tendency of the central authorities to a bureaucratic attitude of "take it or leave it." Local government had grown up out of the needs of the poor and had developed through our English tradition of voluntary service.

blanched; the cough had returned and he was again put on Mistura expectorans cum chlorodyne, ½ oz., four hourly.

A blood count, on February 20, revealed: haemoglobin, 54 per cent.; colour index, 0.93; red blood cells, 2,900,000; mean diameter, 7.3 u.; white blood cells, 3,600 per c.mm. Differential white count: polymorphs, 19 per cent. a marked decrease; lymphocytes, 45 per cent.; immature cells, 36 per cent., an increase. The differential white count showed that the bone marrow was not producing fully matured cells since the cessation of the blood transfusions. The patient had several rigors, and his temperature started to rise, it was 105° F. at 6 p.m. and continued to be raised. Tepid spongings were given with some effect. At times he became mentally confused, irrational, and noisy at night; this was improved by the morphia, gr. ¼, which was ordered to be given four-hourly. The patient remained apparently unchanged for a few days. His eyes were becoming sunken. On February 23 he became much worse and was semi-conscious all day. His pupils were unequal. When he was conscious, which was only for a short time, he did not recognise his people. During all this time there was no incontinence. At 9.30 p.m. that day, he had what appeared to be an epileptiform seizure and passed into unconsciousness in about four to five minutes. Death took place at 10 p.m.

IN PARLIAMENT

Recently, in the House of Commons, Mr. Henderson Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, what was the cause of the delay in distributing to district nursing associations in Scotland the Exchequer Grants to which they were entitled for the year ending March, 1945, and when were the remissions to be made.

Mr. Westwood said that Exchequer Grants were payable to district nursing associations in respect of additional expenditure resulting from the adoption of the recommendations of the Scottish Committee on Nurses Salaries, and were paid through the local public health authorities. While there had been some delay in the issue of claim forms for 1944/45, the local associations had been authorized to make advances to nursing associations for 1944/45 on the basis of their actual expenditure in 1943/44, pending the adjustment of the final settlement for 1944/45.

Mr. Sorensen asked the Minister of Health approximately how many male nurses were working in hospitals under public authorities; how many were in training; and whether steps were being taken to encourage application for such training, particularly in view of the shortage of women nurses and the suitability of male nurses for male patients.

Mr. Bevan said that about 2,000 male nurses were employed in hospitals other than mental hospitals. In mental hospitals and mental deficiency institutions, the number employed was about 10,000. He could not say without special inquiry how many out of these totals were employed by public authorities and voluntary bodies respectively, or how many were in training. He proposed to ask the National Advisory Council on Nurses and Midwives to advise on the best means of encouraging more men to train as nurses.

Mr. W. J. Brown asked the Minister of Health whether in view of the shortage of midwives, he could consider recalling ex-midwives who left the profession on compensation terms in 1939.

Mr. Bevan said that since Regulation 33 of the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, came into operation in September, 1939, Local Supervising Authorities had had the power to enable, by Order, qualified midwives who surrendered their certificates under the compensation terms of the Act of 1936 to resume practice for a specified time. His information was that 72 such Orders were now operative, affecting 131 midwives. The regulation would remain in force for the present.

Nuffield Provincial Hospital Trust

Refresher Courses in Hospital Catering

The Trust has initiated refresher courses in catering at three Provincial centres, Birmingham, Leeds and Wolverhampton, where the Boards of Management of The Birmingham United Hospital (Queen Elizabeth Hospital), the general Infirmary and the Royal Hospital are generously making available the facilities and staff required. This development in the provinces follows the successful results of the Course at the London Hospital arranged by King Edward's Hospital Fund for London.

The syllabus includes lectures and demonstrations, classification of foods, administration of food and catering departments, buying and ordering, special diets, menu planning, cooking and serving of foods, rationing and allowances. The planning of the courses has been undertaken by the responsible officers at each of the hospitals and they have had the advice and assistance of Miss Rose Simmonds, chairman of the British Dietetic Association.

The courses, each consisting of six sessions are open to administrators, matrons and assistant matrons, dietitians and catering officers, stewards, housekeeping sisters and cooks of hospitals in the areas adjacent to each of the three hospitals mentioned above and no fee is required of those attending. The Wolverhampton and Birmingham courses commence on September 11, and 25, respectively; the one at Leeds opened on August 14. The Birmingham course will be held from 2 to 5 p.m. on Tuesdays and Thursdays for three weeks; the Wolverhampton course will be held on six days between September 11 and 25.

"For months I couldn't get to sleep"

I used to go to bed absolutely worn out and then I simply couldn't get to sleep. I used to lie awake for hours and, of course, in the morning I felt awful.

Then someone told me of Anti-Kamnia. It is really wonderful. Now if I'm feeling over-tired when I go to bed I just take a couple of A.K. tablets. I get to sleep in no time and I wake in the morning full of energy and vim.

You see A.K. has no after-effects. It is an absolutely unique formula, without any aspirin, for calming upset nerves, headaches and almost any sort of pain. Any chemist can give you A.K. and if you aren't delighted with what it does, he'll give you your money back. Try a packet to-day. 1/5 a box (including tax).

VERSATILITY IN INFANT FEEDING

The varied nutritional needs of infants can be met either by modification of a standard infant food in the home or by the use of one of a suitable range of prepared foods. The advantages of the second method are clear when the risks of error and contamination in the first method are considered.

The COW & GATE Foods constitute a range from which a suitable food for every child can be selected. The variations in composition of some of these foods are here shown diagrammatically.

Hands up

who has the nicest mummy

JUST as each mother has the nicest baby, so each baby has the nicest mummy. When you are young — so young that you can only ask with tears and thank with smiles — the world is judged by simple things. To be warm, to be comfy, to be properly fed—that's enough to make the world a smiling place. And one of the happiest roles in a baby's life is played by Johnson's baby powder. Some of the biggest smiles come at powder time. Johnson's seem to understand a baby. For over fifty years it has been the softest, safest powder in the world.

MORNING SICKNESS and DENTAL DECAY

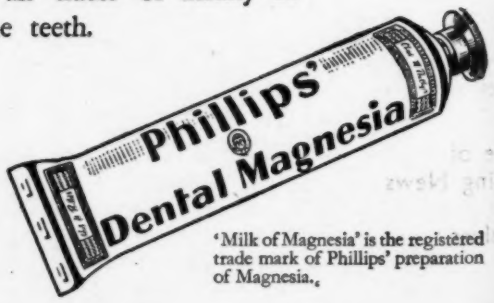
In the study of the etiology of dental decay, it has been proved that acidity in the mouth has a pathogenic action on the teeth. During pregnancy, therefore, and especially in cases where the vomiting of morning sickness is persistent, the patient should be advised to use only Phillips' Dental Magnesia. This dentifrice contains a high percentage of 'Milk of Magnesia', and because of its antacid properties it instantly neutralises all traces of acidity in the mouth and thus preserves the teeth.

Get Phillips' Dental Magnesia for your patient to-day. 1/1d. and 1/10½d. per tube.

Of all Chemists and Stores.



'Milk of Magnesia' is the registered trade mark of Phillips' preparation of Magnesia.
